About BAKU

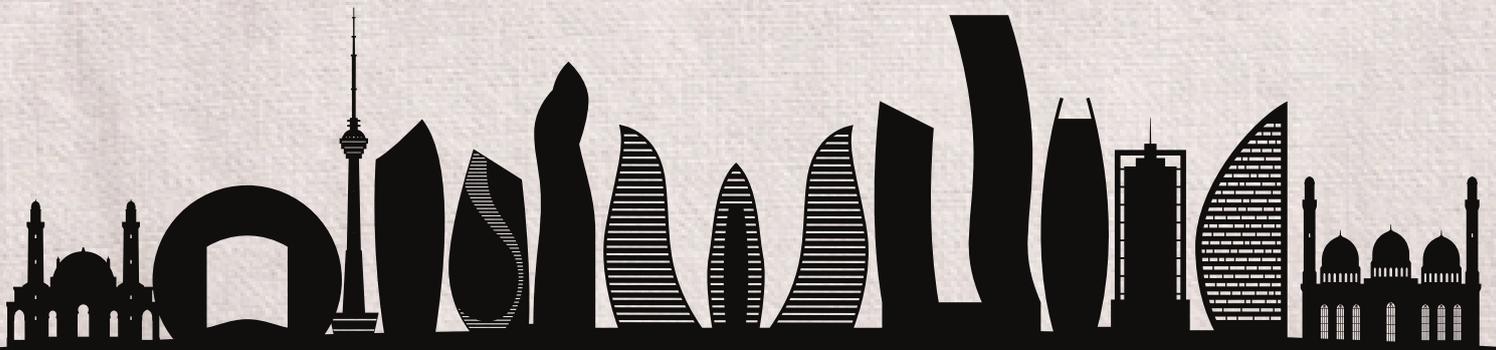

Baku, the capital and largest city of Azerbaijan, is a dynamic metropolis located on the western coast of the Caspian Sea. Known for its unique blend of ancient heritage and modern innovation, Baku offers a striking contrast between old and new. The historic heart of the city, Icherisheher (the Old City), is a UNESCO World Heritage Site, featuring narrow cobbled streets, the Maiden Tower, and the Palace of the Shirvanshahs. Just beyond its ancient walls rise modern architectural masterpieces such as the Flame Towers, symbolizing Azerbaijan's name as the "Land of Fire," and the flowing curves of the Heydar Aliyev Center.

Baku has long been shaped by its role as an energy hub, with oil and gas development fueling rapid growth and modernization. This economic strength has supported cultural revival, international events, and urban development projects along the Caspian waterfront. The city's seaside boulevard, Baku Boulevard, is a popular gathering place offering parks, cafes, and scenic views.

Culturally, Baku reflects a rich mix of Eastern traditions and Western influences. Its cuisine, music, and festivals showcase this diversity, making the city both historically significant and forward-looking, and an increasingly attractive destination for visitors from around the world.
